do a large body of policymaking before there is one example of somebody trying to build an on-site location or whatever makes it problematical to me to start down a relatively endless amount of potential amendments. Senator Wickersham offers them, Senator Raikes offered them, so there are a number on this bill. I think the marketplace would answer the question,...

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: One minute.

SENATOR LANDIS: ...but if you're asking about the underlying value, yes, it would be appropriate for all employees to have access to this kind of fringe benefit. Do I want to require it by law? I think it is unnecessary to require it by law. Should there be a minimum number of employees? Perhaps, perhaps. I don't know what the situation is. At this point, there is no tax credit, and there are only six employers in the entire state that are doing it. I don't want to turn myself into a pretzel thinking and contemplating of all the problems that might be created and ways in which this might be misused. In fact, I think it's better to contemplate the creation of a body of working examples, of people trying to provide child care, and having employers...

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Time.

SENATOR LANDIS: ...help in the mix. So we can do some amendments, but it's an endless road practically.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Thank you, Senator Landis. For debate on the Suttle amendment, Senator Brown.

SENATOR BROWN: Mr. President and members of the Legislature, we have before us the Suttle amendment. There will be several other amendments coming forward that have to do with quality in the programs that are either being established or contracted for under...under this bill. And what we are doing is not just about businesses, it's not just about the parents who hopefully will be better employees by virtue of being...of having the provision of child care that they can count on, but the most important part is that we are doing what is right for children. I think you may remember what Senator Engel said when we were talking about some of the funding in the budget bill for
